This is the key for the Childhood Psychopathy Scale. I added a few items in an attempt to get slightly better representation and internal consistency; these additional items are in bold in the following lists. Norman Poythress has been using the scale with the additional items and has reported good results in several incarcerated samples. The alphas given in parentheses are based on self-reports of 335 adolescents and do not include the bold items. For each scale, reverse the appropriate items and average the items on the scale (this puts all scale in the same metric). As for the new items, I recommend looking to see if they increase the internal consistency of the scale; if they do increase the internal consistency, I would use them.

All of the following scales are scored such that higher scores (if you code “YES” as 1 and “NO” as 0) reflect more of the trait and can be combined to form a total psychopathy scale.
